

Dear members of Interlude,

I write to you today in uncertain times. The global pandemic known as COVID-19 has shuttered life as we knew it to a complete halt, and sadly, that has meant that Interlude was unable to continue to give free, quality music lessons for the time being. Interlude's primary concern, however, has and will continue to be is the safety of everyone involved with our organization, from students, teachers, and parents. With the shelter in place order being extended indefinitely, Interlude has no choice but to continue to suspend in-person music lessons.

However, that does not mean that Interlude will stop giving music lessons at this time. The board of Interlude has discussed the issue thoroughly and has decided to transition to online music learning until this crisis is resolved, and we are proud to announce that after countless hours of trial and development, Interlude is beginning the MUSICfromHOME initiative.

I want to stress that moving to an online setting does not diminish the quality of education that we are giving you. Our tutors will still show the same effort and dedication to you as they have in the past with in-person lessons, and I believe that we can get through these unprecedented times together.

For the students we were unable to accommodate in the past, Interlude's new MUSICfromHOME program should allow us to match you with a tutor more efficiently now, and you should be able to begin lessons with Interlude shortly. The board thanks you for your patience with us through the months, and we hope to see you soon as a student of Interlude.

If you have any questions about this, please do not hesitate to contact me at the email below. For any questions about the COVID-19 outbreak guidelines, please refer to the IUSD statement linked here.

Thank you for your patience with us as we navigate through these times,
